Hot on the pursuit with a different goal in mind

The information from Asher is enough for Melissa to get the investigation on the way. But there's one problem: that's not what Asher wants.

She's always known which side she stands on, until now.

When it comes to law and order, Melissa knows exactly which side she will side with. But Asher is slowly peeling away everything she believes, gently burning them away until all that's left are doubts and misgivings.

Time is running out.

Melissa has no choice but to trust Asher, trust his unorthodox and illegal methods, and trust that when the dust has settled, they'll emerge from it with newfound understanding--both for themselves and for each other. But with the final moment of decision coming, which side of the thin blue line will she stand on?

EXCERPT

“But at the same time, you commit crimes. And in my world that is wrong. So I’m ashamed at my inability to stop looking at everything through black and white lenses.”

“Why won’t you tell him?” he asked.

“Because I don’t know if I can trust him,” she answered. “Too much information is dangerous in the wrong hands.”

“I see,” he felt dumb for thinking otherwise.

“I’m sorry I hurt you,” Melissa sat on the sofa beside him. “Can you forgive me?”

“No,” he answered honestly.

“I just thought…”

“If I forgive you, then I can’t teach you why it was a bad decision to speak to me that way,” he looked over at her.

“Really?” she felt the familiar tightening of her insides. “How will you do that?”
